NEW YORK, MONDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1893,

JUROR LOW INSANE.

Collapses in the Box While Mr. Brooke Is Pleading.

"They Can't Convict Dr. Meyer," He Raves.

Now Learned that He Had Once Been in Bloomingdale.

There was a sudden pause to-day in the sensational trial of Dr. Henry C. F. Meyer, which was drawing to a natural close in the Court of Oyer and Terminer. It was while the eloquent Charles W was in the midst of his plea for the life of the accused doctor.

The seventh juror, Alexander B. Low a plumber, at 102 West Eighty-third fourth street, fell suddenly ill at noon was hurriedly carried into the office of the Clerk of Chambers, adjoining the ourt-room, and in ten minutes was raving an dviolent, as the result of cerebra congestion.

This pause will probably mark the end of the trial, for in the midst of the excitement a young man, white with anxiety and fright, pushed his way to Justice Barrett's desk and said that Juror Low was his father; that he was ruined by the destruction by fire of the Rockaway Beach Hotel some years ago, and had been so mentally unbalanced by the catastrophe that it had been necessary to confine him in a hospital for the insane.

sary to comme min in a large man, past mid-insane.

Plumber Low is a large man, past mid-dle age, florid and of full habit. After he had been sworn as a juror to try Dr. Meyer, District-Attorney Nicoll received anonymous letters, saying that Low had been an inmate of an asylum. When the twelfth juror was sworn an unusual recess of twenty minutes was ordered by Justice Barrett.

o assist, others to elamber out of the box.

Dr. O'Sullivan and four jurors carried the sick man into the next room. Dr. O'Sullivan stripped him to the waist, placed him on a couch and put a cake of the form a water-tank upon his head.

Dr. Minden, who attended Brandt in his last illness, and Dr. Henry B. Carpenter, of 49 West Thirty-fifth street, who were in the court-room, hastened to the side of the sick man, and in ten minutes it took all their strength to keep the patient on the couch.

He threw his arm about and yelled:

"I can do anything! Anything!"

Drs. Carpenter and Minden reported to Justice Barrett that Juror Low was suffering cerebral congestion, and would not be able to return to the consideration of the Meyer case to-day, if ever.

An adjournment was ordered till tomorrow. Meantime Dr. Carlos F. MacDonald. State Commissioner in Lunacy, was sent for to examine Juror Low wand determine whether he is mentally for to go on with his duties as a juror. Dr. Dama was selected by Justice Barrett to act with Dr. MacDonald.

The excitement in the court-room when he juror collapsed was intense. The faces of the women present blanched while the men struggled to get out and nearer to the place to which the sick man had been removed.

Dr. Carpenter gave the opinion that Juror Low was suffering with acute dementia caused by the mental and physical strain resulting in the cerebral congestion. It might be only temporary, it might result in permanent derange—sase having been given so much publicity.

Dr. Carpenter succeeded in quieting the rayings of the sick juror by the tase of morphine and hyoscyamine, and at 12.40 he was removed to eBilevue Hospital in an ambulance.

It will be recalled that in the closing days of the trial of Dr. Robert W. Buchanan for murder by poisoning, the fanan for murder by poisoning, the little of Dr. Robert W. Charles W. Brooke and Dr. O'Suillivan per the lawyers fo the defense in that Juror Paradise had a sort of fit, and Mr. Brooke asked the Court to withdraw a juror from the bo and thus make a mistrial on the alleged mental incapacity of the sick juror. It was refused by Recorder Smyth, and Mr. Brooks moved for a new trial a week later, submitting affidavits to show that Paradise was mentally unbalanced. The proof the other taily unbalanced. The proof the other tails was denied.

In his ravings Juror Low seemed able to recognize the various people of his acquaintance. At the request of Dr.
Carpenter he pointed out and told the names of Capt. Rickets, Dr. Minden and others connected with the trial, but about other things he raved like a madman. He yelled:

"They can't convict Dr. Meyer. Nobody can do it. I can do anything. I can sing, I can dance—I can do anything. But they can't convict Dr. Meyer.

There was an enormous crowd in and about the Court-House, when four policemen emerged from the room where the juror had been subdued, carrying him down the sairs and out at the Chambers street door to the ambulance.

Low lay on his back on a stretcher, his eyes open and rolling, but apparently dazed from the opiates and helpless.

The police had much difficulty in makling a passageway through the crowds.
But the sick man made no motion, said nothing.

Mrs. Flizgerald was taken from the Tombs by a deputy sheriff, and allowed to sit apart from the ordinary female prisoners in the inclosure.

She was dressed from head to foot in deep black, and appeared to be unconcerned about the proceedings that were going on in court. She kept staring at blank space, and her mouth twitched nervously.

Drs. Carlos Macdonald and Austin Flint recently examined Mrs. Flitzgerald and declared her to be inssine. Assistant District-Attorney Davis, who is in charge of the case, says that these physicians and Detectives Jacoby and Hamilton will be the only witnesses called to testify before the jury.

In event of the jury adjudging her insane, which is anticipated, Judge Martine will commit her to the Asylum for Insane Criminals at Matteawan.

recess of twenty minutes was ordered by Justice Barrett.

No one knew the reason for this recess. But during those twenty minutes Justice Barrett called Juror Low to his side. He talked with him and examined him quietly, but could discover no sign of mental trouble. Finally he asked Low if he had ever had any mental trouble, and on receiving a negative reply advised the lawyers of both sides, whereupon the lawyers Sixty-ninth Regiment. The Evening World" reporter has been watching Juror No. 7. The man seemed to be very much affected by the plea of the lawyer. His hands twitched, and as the speaker proceeded the juror's head moved till, at 11.56, his head was swaying from side to side, his lips moved as if muttering, and his eyes rolled. The reporter called the attention of Dr. O'Sullivan and Mr. Nicoll to the juror. Mr. Brooke paused and asked:

"Mr. Low, are you ill?"

"N-no: there's nothing the matter with me. I m all right, replied the juror, but his voice was thick and articulation seemed difficult.

Mr. Nicoll repeated the question. The juror tried to reply again, but got no further than "No." when he threw up both hands, stiffened out straignt in h.s. chair and then collabsed.

Every spectator arose in his place. Dr. O'Sullivan leaped on the District Attorney's table and into the jury-box, all the jurors were on their feet, some to assist, others to clamber out of the box.

sion is included in the charter of the Rieccker and West Twenty-third street line.

It is asserted that the road cannot stand extraordinary expenses, because of recent depredation in its revenues, due to its cars having been taken off Broadway when the cable was put in operation on that thoroughfare.

The line, which was one of Jake Sharp's old roads, formerly ran its Fulton ferry cars from Ann street to Bleecker, over Broadway. The cars that ran to Broadway. The cars that ran to Broadway. The cars that ran to Broadway bridge then used the Centre and Elm streets tracks to Canal, and from this street ran over Broadway to Bleecker. This enabled the cars to get many Broadway passengers. When the cable was put in operation however, the horse cars were taken off lower Broadway, and all of the Bleecker and Twenty-third street line cars were started to running up Centre, Elm and Crosby streets to Bleecker and thence, westward. The average daily receipts, which before that time had been $550 average, and instead of making nine trips it was considered necessary to reduce the number, to eight.

The franchise over the Wooster street routs is controlled by the new Broadway Bine, which has been occasionally sending a car over it to retain the charter. The use of the route by the Bleecker and Twenty-third street line would, it is asserted, he advantageous to this Company, but there is a great deal of doubt whether it has the right to change its route.
